The News by the Europa.

The telegraphic synopsis of the mails by the Europa confirms the previous announce ment of the conditions upon which peace was restored between France and Austria, and leaves but little room to hope for Italian Independence. Letters received at Paris indicate much discontent amongst the Italians. and it is stated that the Parisians feel indigmant at Napoleon for failing to fulfill his promises to the Italian people. Great agita-tion prevailed at Milan, where the Pope was burned in effigy, and it is rumored that troubles are brewing in Venetia, but we are not told of what nature. The Pope, apprehending danger, was about to call for armed protection. The only reason Napleon has given for the course he pursued, is in his address to the army, in which he stated that peace was coucluded because the contest was about to assume proportions no long-r in keeping with the interests France and in the war. It was considered quite doubtful whether Gartbaldt would lay down his arms.

The formation of the Hungarian legion had progressed with great success up to the conclusion of the Treaty of Peace, some 5,000 having joined the patriot ranks. The restoration of the petty princes of Tuscany and Modena, who are confederates of Austria, tion will attend these ceremonies, no business was the occasion of no little dissatisfaction.-Altogether, we infer from the tenor of the news, that Italy is in a fever of excitement, and it is not improbable that events there may take a very different turn than either NAPOLEON OF Austria would desire.

A Napoleonie Advocate.

The Milwaukee News sustains Louis Napo-LEON in his course with regard to Italy, in the face of the almost manimous condemnation of the whole civilized world, and contends that he "has accomplished precisely what he laid down in his programme." The News pro

He was solumnly committed to stop right where he has stoppied, and people are surprised that he should keep his word. We never suw any good ground for believing that he would proceed any farther, and would not have been surprised it all he halted a little short of where he is reported to have stopped. It strikes us that Louis Napoli certain solemn promises at the opening of the war to the effect that he took up the sword is behalf of Italian freedom and that he would not lay it down until Italy was freed of the Austrian yoke from the "Alps to the Adriatic." These promises were solemuly renewed in the presence of the people of Milan, when he spoke in glowing terms of the hope of Italian independence and reminded his soldiers that the "spirit of their fore-fathers were looking down approvingly from the heights of Heaven upon their efforts in behalf of Liberty,13 But what has Napoleon done? Austria is permitted to hold nearly one-half of the contested soil, including the almost impregnable defences on the line of the Adige; Lombardy is given a Piedmontese instead of an Austrian ruler, as some of the English papers aptly remark; and the whole of Italy is exected into a Confederation by which the Pope. whose temporal power, even in the Papal States, it was daily expected would be brought to a close, is made, nominally, at least, the ruler of twenty-six millions of people. If the News will examine the terms of the peace and compare them with Napolzon's promises at the opening of the Italian campaign, by which he secured the aid of the Italian patriots to humble his ancient enemy, and still later invoked the influence of Kossurn, under a false pretense, to frighten Austria to terms of peace, it will find that Napoleon stopped very far short of accomplishing "what he laid down in his programme."

Madison, Wednesday, July 27, 1859. The Express Train, which leaves Milwantee at half past one o'clock P. M., for Prairie du Chien, makes but few stops, and travels at a rapid rate. On Tuesday we had two cars well filled with School Teachers and others, on their way to Madison to attend the meeting of the State Association and the exercises, of the University Commencement.

the meeting of the State Association and the exercises, of the University Commencement. The ride was a pleasant one. The weather was delightful and the country in its glory. The foliage of the trees is abundant, the grass looks fresh and green, and the grain fields are commenced and in many fields by the roads side the grain is ent and stucked. I have never seen so large a breadth of land sown to wheat along the line of the M. & M. R. R., as there is this year. The yield is above the average and the quality superior. Corn, thor not very tail, looks thrifty and vigorons.—Farmers hereabouts anticipate the best crop of corn yet raised in the State.

As we approached Madisou, in the bright sunkine of a July afternoon, many of the gassengers, who saw our State Capital for the first time, were quite enthusiastic in their admiration. A fresh breeze ruffled the surface of the Lake, the sunlight glancing from the myriad ripples, and being reflected from the dones, spires and windows of the Cupital Gity. We found pleasant quarters at the Capital House, which Mr. DUTCHER, the energetic landlord, has put in complete order since the adjournment of the Legislature.—The School Teachers, male and female, who have mustered in great force from all quarters of the State, are comfortably and bospitably provided for in private houses. It is supposed that between two and three hundered will be in attendance during the sessions of the Convention.

Fluid Lamp Explosion .- An "infernal machine" in the shape of a fluid lamp exploded in the hands of a young woman in Philadelphia, last Saturday. The blazing fluid was scattered over her entire person. Shrieking with pain and terror she rushed out into the street, where the police and others ran No. 2 for some time. To conclude the perafter her and literally denuded her of her flaming garments. Before this could be accomplished she was terribly burned. The police took her to the Hospital, where she suffered the most agenizing tortures until death then came to her release.

The New York Times of Monday says: The New York Times of Monday says:
One of the most deliberate attempts at murder ever made in this city, occurred at 5 o'clock, on Saturday afternoon, on Canal street, near Broadway. The victim was a until lately has resided in Hobile, as mistress of a cotton broker named Robert C. McDonald. Desirous of escaping from her paramour, whose violent and intemperate habits Unable to discover her hiding-place, for this works part her hiding-place, for these works part here.

Address was a masterly production. Its theme was "Decision of Character." This was most happily treated and illustrated, while the clear enunciation and energetic manner of the speaker gave additional force to his eloquent and impressive utterances.

This morning the inauguration of Chancellor Barnare, the new head of the State University, takes place, and the Commencement Exercises come off this afternoon. As the members of the State Teachers' Associa-evening at Good Templars' Hall to an andience of fifteen persons-on the delusion of Spiritualism. He labored to show that the spiritual manifestations so-called were from the Devil, and quoted from the Bible that portion relating to SAUL and the witch of Endor to prove his assertion. At the conclusion of his lecture a gentleman in the audience volunteered a few remarks on the nature of The Devil-very learnedly defining that imaginary hero to be only an intangible principle of evil, and explained the casting out of the seven devils of MARY MAGDALENE, by saying that she was oured of seven evils-as for instance the tooth-sche, rheumatism, &c., and concluded his voluntary and episodical speech by denying that there was any proof of supernatural beings whatever. As he seated himself, Mr. BAILEY rose and asked whether in removing the evil spirit of toothache it was possible to send it into a herd of swine, as was narrated in the Scriptures. This question nonplussed Speaker formance, a Spiritualist took the platform and we left him valiantly overturning the premises of the preceding lecturer, the audience evidently much pleased at the triangular exhibition.

LECTURE ON LIFE, CHARACTER AND PUB-HE SERVICES OF HENRY CLAY .- THOS. F. MARSHALL delivered an excellent lecture last evening, on the above subject, at Albany Hall. He stated, in commencing, that he was born within a mile of Ashland (the home of Henry Clay) and had known him from early childhood. I was (he said) when he died-if he has ever died-at least, ceased to respire-requested to give an address on his character, which I declined. But all of the orators who have undertaken to give his life, have failed, from a misconception of the man He traced the course of CLAY, from early boy. hood to his entrance into the political arena, with a fervid and graphic power. He (the speaker) said Mr. CLAY was an extensionist; he always looked to an extension of our Territory, and always labored for the good of the whole country. The stamp of nationality was on his brow and shone there till death threw his mantle over him. The only subject on which he ever changed his views was on the U. S. Bank question in 1811.

At the time England claimed the right to search our ships, our government fitted out gunboats for her navy and carried out this plan for years, thereby harassing our commerce. Mr. CLAY, in his great speech on this question, said, "give us war or give us peace," and claimed that the flag that waved over the ship proclaimed its nationality. Mr. MARSHALL is an eloquent and foroible speaker, and probably better acquainted with the life of HENRY CLAY than any other living man. Last evening the lecture was brought down to the time of the Missouri Compromise. This evening the lecture will be from the time of the Missouri Compromise to the death of HENRY CLAY.

[Original.] "LEARN OF ME."

BY GEO. B. MARION. Come learn of Thee! How prone, oh, Lord Are we to wander off

Amid the gilded scenes of life, And at Thy teachings scoff: And oh, how few are they who love To hear Thy word, and see Mankind come forth with one accord And try to learn of Thee!

Armed men would meet no more in war. Nor death-shricks pleace the sky; For we would live in harmony, And trusting in Thee die. And all our sorrows and our cares

Would vanish like a dream, And earth with nought but happiness Forevermore would teem, And none would fear life's fickle road Thy lamps would light its gloom, And even throw their silvery rays

Across whose dark and dreary vale t flowery bridge would arch, O'er which the earth's departed ones With angel guides would march Oh, earth an earthly paradise, Of peace and joy would be, If we would bow our lofty head-And try to learn of Thee !

BRICK .- The manufacture of brick in this city has fallen off somewhat during the past year, but is now reviving again. The total amount during the past year will not exceed thirty-six millions. The discovery of the marl in the Chicago river, impregnated with the sulphuret of sulphur, has enabled the manufacturers of that city to make a brick almost equal to those of our own. The preference for fronts is still for the Milwaukee brick, and the material here warrants the manufacture of a much better and finer brick than is usually offered by our workmen .-The difference between the Eastern red brick and the yellow brick of Milwaukee consists principally in the clay itself, the former conaining the sulphuret of iron in combination with alumina, the latter sulphur instead .-In tempering the clay for the manufacture of red brick, it is customary to add nearly onesixth of coal screenings to facilitate the burning. This addition to the clay is no improvement to the building material when finished, as it leaves the block more porous, the advantage gained being in burning, the Eas-tern kilns performing their work in half the time of ours. Milwaukee brick are deservedly celebrated, and are superior (on actual comparison) to the mari brick made in the vicinity of London. Baltimore brick we are told are not so durable. The immense de-posits of this clay in the vicinity of Milwau-see promise an endless supply of material. Young Men's Christian Association .-This Association seems to have recovered the effects of the late fire, and is now fully established in its new quarters, in Bowman's new building, adjoining the Cusom House, on Milwaukee street. Mrs. Bryan's Seminary.—By reference to an advertisement it will be seen that the Fall Term of Mrs. Bryan's Seminary for young ladies, at Batavia, Genesee county, N. Beautiful in its surroundings, situated in a beautiful village, and presided over by one who adds to the sterner virtues of scholarship, the refluement without which learning is hardly an acquisition to a woman, the Seminary has advantages not excelled. He lay in the gutter on Wisconsin street, and a sympathizing knot mournfully watched him take his departure. Had his stomach been subjected to a post mortem examination, a muni cipal "button," impregnated with strychnia would undoubtedly have been discovered.

FOR THE EAST.-The upper cabin steam packet Globe, Capt. Amos PRATT, leaves this morning at 12 o'clock, for Buffalo.

Detroit & Milwaukee Railway.—The impression having cone forth through the Chicago papers, and otherwise, that tickets issued by this line would not be good after thirty days, and that the Company proposed to repudiate tickets sold during the month of June, the agent at Milwaukee, Mr. H. O. Wilson, feels called upon to state in behalf of the Company, through the Milwaukee papers, that the report is without foundation, and false in every particular. That all tickets sold in the month of June are just as good as those they are now selling; and that all tickets issued by the Company, are good until used. Citizens of Wisconsin should make it a point to patrovize this road all they can in preference to those running through Chicago.. Chicago people are doing all in their power to divert Wisconsin travel from the Milwaukee and Detroit route, and thus compel travelers to pass through their mund city. People going east from this State will save between one and two hundred miles travel, and several dollars in money, by taking the route across Lake Micongan. We are pleased to learn that travel is rapidly increasing over this new and popular route.—

denn are to return to their States.

The result of the treaty is generally misprinted in England.

The Emperor Napoleon was on his way home. He was expected to reach Paris on the 18th inst., when further details of the treaty will probably be announced. In his vaddress to his crmy he says that peace was concluded because the contest was about to assume proportions no longer in keeping with the interests France had in the war.

The Emperor of Austria had left the army and was on his way to Visnna. He had issued an order of the day in which he says, alluding to the treaty of peace, that he yielded to the unfavorable political position in which he was planed, because his natural allies did not, as was expected, come to his assistance.

Count Cavour and the Sardinian cabinut have resigned, and it is reported that the reasons for this step were on account of the terms of peace heing unsatisfactory. Count Areze has been charged with the formation of a new cabinet.

Arrival of the Overland Mail. St. Louis. July 27-3 P. M. The overland mail, with dates to the 4th, rrived here last night.

The papers report the failures of Messrs. Dows & Co., distillers, and Pease & Co., millers.

The steamer Washington was detained at St. Catharines three weeks, and at Coronal, Chili, nearly two months, on account of the revolution and inability to obtain coal. When the Washington left Valparaiso the war was about ended. Business was improving.

Brittan J. Hopper, of Long Branch, R I., was murdered by the peons in Coronel.

The Washington had been libelled at San Francisco for money due for supplies. Francisco for money due for supplies.

A fire at San Francisco destroyed nearly all the buildings on Davis street, between Broadway and Tallejio; also the wharf fronting on Davis street—the loss is not stated.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Times says that three applications were made by Napoleon to Austria before she would consent. Overtures were made direct by Napoleon for the purpose of preventing the mediation of neutrals. diation of neutrals.

The same correspondent says the Pope was burnt in effigy, at Milan, and unfriendly feelings existed between Napoleon and Victor Emanuel. The latter had issued a proclamation to the people of Lombardy, amouncing their amexation to Sardinia, according to his own desire many times expressed, and his determination to ameliorate their political condition. Emanuel entered Milan on the 13th, amid the enthusiastic plandits of the citizens. It is rumored that the Emperor and Empress of France would visit Vienna, and it is also reported that the French army commenced countermarch, and it is thought promenced countermarch, and it is thought pro-bable that the dismissal of Cardinal Anto-nelli would follow this state of affairs.

It was rumored that Garibaidi was about to issue a proclamation, and it was considered doubtful whether he would lay down arms.

Horse Rail Roads and Ballway Connections Some persons appear to think, or pretend to think, at least, that the main object of horse railroads in this city would be to connect the depots of the various railways diverging from this point. With this view of the case, a writer in Tuesday's paper appeared greatly alarmed lest the Common Council should grant a charter to some company to run railway cars through our streets propelled by steam at the rate of thirty miles an hour! To persons who are disposed to share the fears of our friend "Wisconsin," we wish to state that in our estimation, there is no oc casion whatever for alarm on this score. The Common Council, we apprehend, has no such power, in the premises, and if they had they would not certainly be mad enough to commit such an outrage upon the people. We are not aware that there is any project on foot for the construction of horse railroads here at present, but if there was, the only part they could perform towards connecting the Railways would be that done by carriages and omnibusses now. The idea of running a locomotive and train of cars from one depot to another through the streets is too preposterous to be for a moment entertained and such a project we are confident would never meet the sanction of the Legislature, the Common Conneil or the people. We think it very desirable that the various Railroads centering in our city should be connected, but the only way they can enjoy such connection is by means of a Central Depot. The delay and expense incident to the present system would be avoided by having one common terminus for all the roads, and it requires no mycroscopic vision to see that its tendency would be to increase the tide of travel and traffic through our city.

But whether or not all the conflicting in terests can be so harmonized as to admit of the centralization of the various railway termini Horse Rail Roads will eventually be needed for local business, if nothing more,

Resolved, That, in order to make ourselves effec-tive at the poils, we will act as a usit in Casting OUR BALLOTE FOR MEN WHO HAVE BEEN EN-DORSED BY THIS ORDER!

Here is a nice little exhibition of proscriptive bigotry on both sides. The fact is that the Democratic Party, having betrayed all its boasted principles, has become so thoroughly democratized that the rival cliques are resorting to all sorts of tricks and devices to circumvent each other. The work on this road was began last Fall, and has been done little at a time. There is no doubt the cars will be running over it by the 1st of September next; they will be drawn by horses. This railroad has cost but $6,000 per mile.

rye or winter wheat hereabout. Oats and tage. The greater inducements we offer, the greater the amount of trade and travel which flows through here, and the greater the number of customers that are attracted hither. It is a false notion that any compulsory tribute is of lasting benefit to a city, and I deny that Milwaukee can possibly be made any other than an important starting and stopping point. It is true that Chicago has, by her connection with the Mil. & Miss. R. R. and will by her connection with the La Crosse, draw more or less from us, which twould otherwise come here; but our true and sure way to counteract this is to increase the facilities of doing business here, and to push forward our uncompleted roads, especially those running South-West, which would draw to us more of her trade and travel than she could possibly draw from us. I am not in favor of Horse Railroads, except it may be as a temporary resort, but I think our roads should have one general Union Depot, from which they would radiate in every direction. I sincerely believe the completion of our nuffinished roads, and the adoption of a Union Depot, would do more for our permanent. stopping point. It is true that Chicago leas, Depot, would do more for our permanent prosperity than any other step we could take,

The Massacre at Perugia. idence of the Boston Couri

Florence, June 30.

Mr. Perkins had arrived in Perugia with his family a week previous, intending to take a villa for the summer, and meanwhile was very humiliating fact, if fact it is, that the would march into the piazza, take possession,

No one in the hotel felt any apprehension of personal danger until they heard the soldiers furiously battering at the outer door.—
Then they felt the peril, and Mr. Perkins having discovered a long narrow passage, or closet, took refuge there with his family and the landlady and her mother, just as the door below was battered down, and the soldiers came rushing up the staircase. They killed two servants in the hotel whom they met upon the stairs unarmed and defenceless, and also the landlord who stood at the head of the stairs and claimed protection as an inndifficulty, over his comrades, and induced them to retire, though not until they had snatched away the watches of the ladies, and not without great reluctance on their part, for they heaped all sorts of opprobrious epithets on them in French, and several times heaped their becomes to be a regime them. and would render of no account all the con-and did not leave untouched or uninjured one single article of the personal property belonging to Mr. Perkins and his family. For more than two hours they were in the house, ransacking, destroying, and pillaging, while the party remained in the closet, and the soldier stood at the door to protect them.

At last the soldiers finished their work and depended and any friends came from the departed, and my friends came from the close; but they had scarcely emerged when there was another inroad of soldiers below, and the soldier Conrad pushed the party back and the soldier Conrad pushed the party back into the closet just as a new gang entered the clamber. Thirking that their comrade had plunder concealed within the door which he guarded, they drew their sabres to cut him down, when he feigned to be very drunk, and they left him without trying the search they intended, and were soon out of the house.—Then he opened the door of the closet and the party came out. Soon after the rappelle was beaten, and the soldier Courad was for leaving them. But Mr. Perkins said, "No, you are the only one of these men who seems them the landlady of the hotel, who had lost them the handlady of the hotel, who had lost her husband, and was stripped of all she possessed. Before they left Perugia, Mr. Perkins went through his apartments at the hotel, and found only broken trunks and boxes, and shreds of clothing. The family lost property to the amount of two thousand dollars, and more. As to the friendly soldier who saved their lives, Mr. P. asked what he most wanted, and found it was to leave his regiment, and Mr. P. gave him a letter to his bankers in Rome yesterday, requesting them to procure his discharge, and take him to his home in Constance.

All the ladies of this family behaved heroically throughout all these terrible and trying scenes which I have narrated. Not one of them fainted, or sbricked, or lost her presence of mind, but all were calm and composed through the whole. ence of innot, but all were call and composed through the whole.

The family arrived here night before last, and I have heard the whole story from their own lips, and give it to you verbatim, without exaggerating any of the particulars.

BY GEORGE MARTIAL. "Courage, Sorbie! we are nearly home."
The young bride looked out on the broad, shady avenue, along which they were rapidly driving, and sank back with a weary sigh—Ti was all so strange—so like a dream. That driving, and sank back with a weary sigh—

It was all so strange—so like a dream. That solemn ceremony at the altar, congratulations, soles and adieus, familiar faces, strange sights and sounds, all floated before her, and rang in her ears, and re-produced themselves in confused fantastic dreams, from which she was continually starting, awakened by a sudden terror—the thought of meeting her new found relatives. Would Allan's mother kiss her, and his sisters welcome her? Could Riss her, and his sisters welcome her? Could she ever feel at home among them, and would they be like him—tall, and dark, and silent? Should she—

The carriage stopped, and so did Sophie!s heart—or, at least, she fanoied that it did—for a moment. Perhaps Allan divined, her terror, for he pressed Ler hand as they went up the broad steps, and through the spacious hall into a handsome saloon, where, standing in the middle of the floor, was a fair, erect woman, with handsome features, who held out a small, plump hand, and said, in a erect woman, with handsome teatures, wheld out a small, plump hand, and said, in a voice that gave the lie direct to her words: "I am happy to see you Mrs. Allan—my dangater Kate, motioning towards a handsome girl, who had risen languidly on their entrance.

entrance. "Glad to see you, Mrs. Faulkner. You see I give you the full benefit of your new title. You must excuse mother if she is not yet magnanimous enough to do the same." All this time the brilliant eyes were deliberately scanning the trembling Sophie from head to foot. was this her welcome? Words died away apon her tongue. She was roused from her stupor by the sarcastic voice of Mrs. Faulk er:

''I see you are sleepy, Mrs. Allan—before you retire, however, permit me to present my youngest daughter, Frances."

Sophie looked up, and saw a girl who might have been either eighteen, or twenty, so little was her age denoted by her appearance—light haired, freckled, plain, almost ugly, who, giving her an ungracious nod, turned away to her book, with an air that said plainly, she considered it of more importance than all the brides in the world.

Allan's dark eye flashed fire, but he only hurried Sophie away to her room, where, by an unwonted gayety and tenderness, he strove to raise her evidently flagging spirits; succeeding so well, that she was enabled to reenter the drawingroom, with a tolerable degree of calmness.

"Have you seen your house yet?" was Mrs. Faulkner's first inquiry. Then, without waiting for an answer. "I suppose not—you will find it small and plainly finished, but, of course, you knew what you had to expect when you married Allan. He can inherit nothing, except at my pleasure; if he had chosen to marry where his birth, his education, and appearance well entitled him to do, I should have given him a liberal allowance. As it is (you see I speak plainly, daughter-in-law,) you both had a clear understanding of what you had to expect; or should have had. I suppose you know very little of housokeeping?"

"Once a week," stammered Sophie, "I used to." you retire, however, permit me to present my youngest daughter, Frances."

"Oh! of course—of course," again interrupted the lady. "We all know what that amounts to. I suppose you can make poor cake and bad bread; but that is not house-keeping. I am an unerring physiognomist, and I see plainly that you are not practical. and I see plainly that you are not practical.
Don't you disturb yourself, however, (to Allan, who had just entered, and was listening with anything but a delighted face) Julia can keep house for you," adding, turning to Sophie—"an old servant who has been in the family fifteen years—and I will see that she conducts it properly."

"Which will be a charming arrangement for you," chimed Miss Kets Faulthon.

"Whost will be a charming arrangement for you," chimed Miss Kate Faulkner, with a tone and expression that Sophie could by no means make out, "and you will have no-thing to do but embroider monsters in Berlin wool, to frighten Allan with when he comes

Let us rather rejoice that the jackdaws left our timid, fluttering dove a single plume, and take a peep into the little dwelling, where she was shortly to be installed as mistress.

Charming, she pronounced it, and so it was—nestling down among rosses, and wide was—nestling down among roses, and wide branching trees, with cool matting, and airy, waving curtains.

Sophie christened it the "Snuggery," probably because the dining room was doing its best to get in the parlor, while the kitchen insisted on hannting both—while the narrow staircase rushed precipitatingly into their sleeping apartment, from whence opened a spare room, of which Mrs. Faulkner had the key, as Julia informed Sophie, to her no small dismay.

"Mrs. Faulkner thought, mum, that ye'd not be for having company as it's an ex-

"Mrs. Faulkuer thought, mum, that ye'd not be for having company as it's an expense, and a trouble besides, and there's keys enough now for me to bother my head with, and ye'll plaze mum, excuse me for an hour, as, the 'madam,' wishes me to run up every morning, mum, and get her advice as to the house, mum?"

It was in Sophie's heart to demand the keys, dismiss Julia, and take the reins herself; then came the remembrance of Mrs. Faulkner's words: "he can inherit nothing except at my pleasure," and she forebore.

Gone, however, were all her pleasant dreams of housekeeping and wonderful surpises, in the cooking and economy line, after the fashion of those model wives of whom we so often read, but seldom sae: not a cake the fishion of those model wives of whom we so often read, but seldom see; not a cake could be made, or a pie or pudding baked, that it was not known at the great house how many eggs and how much butter and sugar went to its composition. Not a joint appearted on their table that Mrs. Faulkner did not know its weight and cost; not a barrel of flour, that she could not tell how long it lasted.

'Mrs. Allan is very liberal in her ideas,' she would say to her son: "She buys the hind-quarter of lamb when it is at the dearest; we think the fore-quarter good enough; your sugar, too, hardly lasts as long as it ought. Mrs. Allan leaves these to Julia, when she should attend to it hersel; foot need not look so anyre." turning to Soulie: when she should attend to it hersel: I you need not look so angry. Turning to Sophie: "What I say is for your good—you have no head, no force of character. I told you so when I first saw you; but you might improve. Why do you not wash your china yourself? The gilding is worn off already, and there are your shutters open, and the sun streaming in on the carpet—it is quite faded now!

All this before Allen, who, after a while, believed and re-echoed these complaints—being quite convinced at the end of a year, that were it not for the superhuman exertions of his mother, he would infallibly be ruined by Sophie's ignorance and negligence. Yet even his stern face relaxed, and his hard voice took a kinder tone, when there sounded in his ear the feeble wait of his first-born son.

Sophie's joy was too great for utterance; she would sit for hours with its velvet cheek pressed to hers, or looking curiously into its odd little wrinkled face.

In a few days, over came Mrs. Fankner; the infant was duly examined, pronounned a fine child, a perfect Faulkner, and the image of its father.

"It has your disposition, though, Mrs. Allan; it is fretful," remarked the amiable mother-in-law, when, unused to such rough handling, the tender little creature set up a cry.—

"Put that child down, nurse," taking it forcibly from her hands, and depositing it on a cushion. "There! now let it scream—it must learn to control its temper."

"But it is only two weeks old, expostulat-But it is only two weeks old, expostulat-must learn to control its temper."

"But it is only two weeks old, expostulated Sophie.

"It don't matter if it were only a day old; but I see very well how it will be. You will run it by your weak indulgence, and want of system. I must speak to Allan about it. Julia, tell Mr. Allan I wish to see him.

Sophie, who knew by sad experence what that portended, took refuge in a hearty cry. Allan came home nunsually late, and looking very gloomy—which means that he had stopped at "the house" on his way home. "Now, Sophie," was his first salutation, "I will not have the child ruined. He is to be throught up on a system. Feed him once in so often; keep him lying down for a given period; if he won't do it make him; walk him out."

Here he broke down; he had forgotten his lesson. "Hadn't you better go back and learn the rest of it?" suggested Sophie, exasperated be-

Sophie sat still—too wretched to cry, even to think—only conscious of a dull pain, as of a load that was crushing her to the earth. A hand was laid on her shoulder, and a voice sounded in her ear that made her start; it was that of Frances.

"What's the matter, Sophie?" (It was

"What's the matter, Sophie?" (It was the first time she had ever called her anything but Mrs. Faulkner.) "They've been at you again, you needn't deny it. Can't I see? I've got my senses, I suppose, as well as other people; and it don't take much to see that ms' is killing you, and Allan is fool enough to help her. Oh! I know she tried it with Kate and me; but we very soon rebelled—as you would do; if you had any spirit." "When you are reviled, revile not again," said Sophie, softly.
"Yes, I know; and it is all very well if you can do it—and I believe you do—and that's why I like you, though I did once think I never could, but you are at his command to be a fool, and let your house be mismanaged, your husband soured, yourrelf made miserable, and your child ruined."

your ohild rained."

"But Allan is entirely dependent—"

"It's no such thing," interrupted Frances, warmly; "and if ma' told you so, it's just another of her fibs. Pa's left us all equal portions, and Allan has enough to live handsomely. Ma' has no more right to interfere in your affairs than I have; and if you are wise, you'll send Julia out of this house and rule yourself. Good night! No: I don't want to see the baby—little red squalling thing! Good night! and remember what I say!

Next morning, came a message from Mrs.

Julia had already ordered the nurse to get the haby ready—what then was her astonishment when Sophie said, quietly: "You will not take the baby around to day, Eiza, Julia, you may tell Mrs. Faulkner that it is not convenient."

This, however, was but the beginning of wonders. Sophie, who had hitherto care-ully avoided the kitchen, made a descent in to these awful regions; and though actually rembling at her own audacity, demanded between Tuits. he keys of Julia.

"And what for, mum?" demanded that "And what for, mum;" demanded that functionary, bristling up. "Didn't the madam' give me the keys herself, and haven't I always..."
"Give me the keys," repeated Sophie, calmly, just as Mrs. Faulkner herself entered the kitchen, in a state resembling that of an enraged turkey-cock.
"Whot's all this phout 21 she demanded

What's all this about ?" she demanded. "And what do you mean, Mrs. Allan, by not sending the baby? I am not accustomed to have my messages received in this manner." "It was not convenient."
"When I send for people I expect them to make it convenient."

Sophie turned away to give some order to the amazed cook.
"What is all this about the keys?" "What is all this about the keys?" per-sisted Mrs. Faulkner,
"I choose to take them," answered Sophie, suddenly facing round; "that is all. I am extremely obliged to you, also, for Julia, but cannot think of depriving you longer of ser-vices which you have so often assured me were invaluable. I have engaged some one to take her place; and while I think of it, Mrs. Faulkner, I will trouble you for the key to the snave room. I expect my sister shortto the spare room. I expect my sister shortly to spend the summer.

Mrs. Faulkner was absolutely speechless with rage and astonishment. She saw that Sophie was firm, and her only resource lay in comptaining to Allan, which she hastened to de—relating the whole matter in the most exagerated terms.

to do—relating the whole matter in the most exaggerated terms.

When, however, after a month passed under the new regime, that gentleman found his expenses diminished and his domestic comfort materially increased; he altogether declined to interfere; and though Mrs. Faulkuer prophesied all manner of avil, and Kate exhausted her wit on Sophie and her housekerping, that little personage never regretted the time when she became "the head of her own household."
